Part XXII: Captain Moodie's Ordeal

“The Cutty Sark was rolling heavily in the trough of the sea all the time, and as there was more water coming aboard on the lee roll than on the weather one, the forge was set up on the weather side of the deck, but, even so, it was constantly being upset and washed away.”

First-time customers are often surprised to see that packets and tins of tea are personalized. Those who prefer no personalization, or who wish to have alternate names printed on certain packets, may specify their choice while ordering. Web customers may do so during checkout (after address confirmation). Refer to Our Packaging on page 7 for limitations and additional information.

November 1, 2011

We continue to evaluate the difficult situation facing Japan's tea industry in the aftermath of the earthquake which caused such severe damage throughout the Fukushima area. We have taken a very cautious approach to managing this important segment of our catalog. To that end, we have purchased heavily from tea stocks that had already been exported from Japan prior to the earthquake. This, however, has limited our range to a significant extent.

To mitigate some of the impact of the diminishing range of our Japan tea offerings, we have added a few China teas that have been produced in the style of Japanese favorites. Among these teas are Gen-mai Cha (page 21), Sencha, Ku-ki Cha, and Ho-ji Cha (page 22). All of these teas are NOP certified organic.

At the high end, we have added a new section to our catalog, the Teas of Korea (page 36). Green teas from Korea are among the finest produced in the world, and unfortunately, there is a very limited supply. As a result, these teas are priced comparably to some of the finest Japan green teas.

In the last issue of the Upton Tea Quarterly, we discounted our 2011 Pre-Chingming China teas (page 17) by approximately 20%. In this issue we have taken another 20% off the former sale price, which makes these teas more affordable than ever. We expect to add 2012 Pre-Chingming teas in the Spring of 2012.

As we conclude our 22nd full year of operation, we wish to thank our customers for another great year. Loose tea represents roughly 2% of the U.S. tea market, making it a fairly thin market, indeed. In spite of this limited market, there are more sources of loose tea in the U.S. today than in any prior year.

We feel fortunate that, throughout our 22 years of operation, each year has been a record year for sales. We never take our customers for granted, however, and continue to strive for improvement. Thank you for your support, and continued patronage.

Happy tea drinking...

Scale in Cupwt mode weighs in cup units, equal to 2.25 grams.

DIGITAL POCKET TEA SCALE

Premium teas come in a wide range of leaf styles, varying from fine CTC grades to ultra bold-leaf white teas. This tremendous range of leaf style makes measuring tea by volume imprecise. Our digital tea scale solves this problem in a unique way, by introducing a special Cupweight mode. In this mode, the scale displays the precise number of cups that a portion of tea will yield, based on the industry standard of 2.25 grams per 6-ounce cup. Note that this scale will also weigh in grams, ounces and pennyweight (dwt mode).

Each scale is precisely calibrated at the factory. For those who wish to periodically calibrate their scale according to the instruction manual, we offer a 200-gram calibration weight. To test calibration, place a dime on the scale platform. A dime will weigh approximately 2.25 grams (1.00 cupwt), depending on wear and condition. Variation from 2.25 grams by more than 0.05 gram may indicate a need for calibration. Upon restock, a larger production run has allowed us to lower the price of this item. Made in China.

Dial face has three color-coded temperature zones for steeping tea.

TEA THERMOMETER

Using the right water temperature is very important when preparing a cup of tea. We have created an easy-to-use, three-color temperature circle, to indicate the appropriate temperature for steeping tea. The circle is divided into three ranges:

- Green Tea: 140 – 180°F (green zone)
- Oolong Tea: 180 – 200°F (blue zone)
- Black Tea: Up to 212°F (black zone)

At Upton Tea Imports, we find it easiest to use an electric kettle to heat the water to the boiling point, then place the stem of the thermometer into the kettle between the lid and rim, and monitor the temperature until it lowers to the desired level. Caution: Let the water cool a bit before removing the lid of a kettle and use extreme caution to avoid exposure to hot steam.

Note that the steeping temperature on our packets is a recommendation only. You may find that certain teas are more suited to your palate when steeped at a higher or lower temperature. Vary the steeping temperature and length of time to achieve the desired strength and flavor profile that optimizes your enjoyment. As always, there is no substitute for experimentation.

When using this thermometer for other purposes, do not expose the dial face and plastic lens to high heat. Note that calibration may be required occasionally to make sure the boiling point matches the appropriate temperature for boiling water at your altitude. The adjustment nut at the base of the thermometer dial will rotate the dial face for simple calibration adjustments. Made in China.

CHATSFORD™ TEAPOTS AND MUGS

“The simplest way to drink loose tea”

The Chatsford teapot has been designed to make the preparation of loose tea quicker and easier for your everyday use. The ample strainer basket allows full extraction and convenient removal after steeping. The newest earthenware version is illustrated at the right. Ceramics for this series are manufactured in Thailand under the supervision of the London Teapot Company of England. This new version (Series H) represents the basic earthenware model, and is the most affordable teapot in the Chatsford line. Series H teapots are identical to the former earthenware teapots, with the addition of a vent hole in the lid. All teapots have a traditional spherical shape for optimum heat retention. Teapot glazes are lead-free. We offer the earthenware teapot in white, Rockingham brown, blue, green and yellow. The strainer basket, included with all Chatsford teapots and mugs, is produced in England. It is constructed of sturdy polypropylene with nylon mesh filter material. The Series H earthenware teapot is available in four sizes, 2- through 10-cup. Capacities are based on the standard 6-ounce teacup, so if you use a copious mug for serving you will want to order a teapot with extra capacity. For the preparation of a single cup of tea, we also offer the Chatsford tea mug (listed and illustrated below).

Some considerations for those who enjoy receiving our newsletter

Unlike mainstream mail-order companies, Upton Tea Imports does not flood the mail with catalogs; only four issues of the Upton Tea Quarterly are mailed each year. We only send a catalog to customers who request it and who order with some regularity, which can be as little as once every two years.

New callers who do not specify that we send only one catalog will receive approximately six catalogs over an eighteen month period. Those who place at least one order during that period will continue to receive the Quarterly.

There have been a few instances where customers have been ordering regularly and suddenly stop receiving our Quarterly, even though they prefer to continue receiving it. The simple example is where a customer has moved and not notified us of their change of address. Normally, bulk mailings do not receive forwarding service from the U.S. Post Office. Another example is where a web account is established at www.uptontea.com and an unintended newsletter subscription preference is set.

An existing customer who establishes a new web account might choose to NOT be kept on the mailing list. This would be done by selecting the NO option at the question "Do you want to receive a hard copy of our quarterly newsletter in the mail?" While the default is YES, overriding to NO will establish this preference for the existing account. Customers who have a web account are urged to review the section "Your Account", subsection "Account Information" to determine your subscription status.

At the bottom section of "Account Information" within "Your Account", a green toggle button will allow you to set your subscription status. As always, you can call our Customer Service department during normal business hours if you have any questions on this.

Upton Tea Imports' Organic Certification

Upton Tea Imports is a certified distributor of organic teas. Under the guidelines of the National Organic Program (NOP) of the United States Department of Agriculture (USDA), we only label teas as Organic if they carry NOP certification.

We purchase some teas from international tea vendors that carry organic certification in their country of origin, but are not NOP Certified. A few of our Japan teas are certified by the Japan Organic and Natural Foods Association (JONA), but are not NOP certified. We also sell a few teas from Germany that are certified by BCS Öko-Garantie (BCS), but are not NOP Certified.

Teas that are certified by JONA or BCS, but are not NOP Certified will not be labeled Organic due to the strict NOP regulations. For information purposes, we flag such teas with a J or B in the margin of our catalog (e.g., page 44).

Stainless Steel Steeping/Strainer Baskets from Japan

We stock three sizes of this stainless steel steeping basket. Select the appropriate size based on the opening of your cup, mug, or teapot. The mm/inch dimension is the approximate outer diameter of the mesh basket, just below the rim. The rim diameter is the outer diameter of the support ring. The handle is bamboo.

Packaging Options
Please note that we personalize the labels on our packets of tea, unless you request that we not do so. The default name on the packet label is the ship-to recipient. Any text, up to 36 characters, may be substituted for the recipient's name. Up to three different names may be specified for groups of teas on an order at no additional charge. There is no limit for personalization at our website. Our teas are offered in sample quantities as well as a range of packet sizes and optional tins. The smallest size packet is referred to as a single packet or standard packet. In most cases we pack the standard packet with 125 grams (4.4 ounces). The gram weights in our price list are indicated in the columns to the right of the tea header as indicated below. Single and double (-D) packets are also available in plug-top British style tea tins at $2.00 and $3.00 (respectively) above the packet prices. Tins contain the same net weight as that listed in the column immediately to the left of the "In Tin" column. We also offer extra large (-H) packet sizes and jumbo (-K) packets in most cases. Note that packets are heat-sealed to protect freshness. Single- and double-size packets are resealable with a convenient zip-lock closure.

We package teas in multiples of 2, 4 and 8 times the standard packet size. The label on the front of the packet lists the actual net weight.

Our teas are hand-packed by us in a variety of sizes. Larger packet prices reflect the savings incurred by us in labor, as well as reduced margins for large quantity purchases. Savings will vary depending on the scarcity and cost of the tea. When ordering the largest size packets, we recommend dispensing a portion of the tea into a small canister which can serve for daily use. Remember to roll the top of the larger bag tightly to remove excess air before sealing to minimize air exposure and maintain freshness. We suggest ordering only the amount of tea which will be consumed in three months.

*Note SAMPLES
At the request of many of our customers, we now offer all of our teas in sample-size quantities at a nominal price of approximately 20% of a single packet price. Samples start at $1.00 for teas valued at $7.49 or less per packet, and go up as the value of the tea increases. Each item has the sample price in the left price column (with an "S" suffix for an item code). Sample weights are approximately 12% of a single packet weight. This sample pricing policy will allow you to try all of our teas at a reasonable price.

2011 PRE-CHINGMING CHINA TEAS
The festival of Chingming (Qingming) is a 2,500 year old tradition in which people visit the burial sites of their ancestors to pay respect. It is significant in Chinese tea culture because it serves as a demarcation between a distinct pre-Chingming plucking period and the subsequent plucking period occurring after the festival date (usually around April 5). Pre-Chingming teas are prized for their delicacy and subtle, fresh nuances. In the past we have offered a limited number of pre-Chingming teas, but have expanded the range of these premium teas to accommodate increased demand.
	Sample	50 g
PRE-CHINGMING GREEN TEAS
Pre-Chingming Pi Lo Chun: One of the most famous teas in China, traditional Pi Lo Chun comes from Zhejiang province, but this superlative example is from Fujian province. The cup is light and has an outstanding sweet flavor. Although the cup is delicate for most pre-Chingming teas, these early-harvest teas are prized for their fresh character and complex flavors.	ZG66S $2.50 $1.50	ZG66 $12.80 $8.20
Pre-Chingming Jade Buds: This beautifully crafted Fujian province tea is made from an extra-fine plucking, (consisting of a bud and first leaf set). Overall, a very smooth and enjoyable infusion, combining the best of both green and black teas.	ZG43S $1.50 $1.00	ZG43 $8.80 $5.60

ICED TEA SELECTIONS
Virtually any tea can be served iced for a refreshing summer beverage. Many of our customers enjoy iced tea the year round as an alternative to bottled beverages. An excellent way to steep iced tea is the traditional hot tea method, using twice the normal quantity of tea leaves. The steeped concentrate can then be poured over ice when ready to serve. Visit our website for a description of the cold water steeping method for iced tea. Storing or steeping tea at room temperature for extended periods is not recommended.

KOREA GREEN TEAS		Sample	50 g
▶ Korea Green Dae-Jak : Dae-Jak grade is a green tea harvested in late May, and while considered a "normal grade" by Korean standards, this fine tea attests to the overall quality of Korea teas. TEAS of JAPAN

Japan is famous for its unique styles of green teas. The flavor is clean, refreshing, and slightly vegetal. A brief steeping time limits the astringency and heightens the flavor. Steeping with water below the boiling point is often recommended. For those interested in an unusual offering from Japan, we suggest you try our new Japanese black tea, listed below.

DECAFFEINATED TEAS

Our teas are decaffeinated using pure carbon dioxide or ethyl acetate. Both processes remove at least 99.9% of the caffeine and are approved by the USFDA. The flavored decaffeinated teas are flavored with nature-identical (artificial) flavorings. Note that methylene chloride is used in some decaffeination processes for teas sold outside of the U.S.

PREMIUM DECAFFEINATED TEAS

All decaffeination processes used for tea are problematic, and remove flavor as well as caffeine. Teas flavored after decaffeination, such as Earl Grey, will be less compromised, since the added flavoring oils constitute the dominant flavor component. Even these, however, lack some of the character that tea drinkers appreciate. There is one company that is approaching this problem in a unique way. They start with grades of tea that would ordinarily be considered too good for the flavor-robbing decaffeination process. They then sort the final product to eliminate most of the smaller leaf particles that decaffeination produces. Predictably, the result is a superior final product.

Reversals of Fortune in the Tea Industry, Part XXII

In Running Her Easting Down, William F. Baker describes a life at sea as “a hard, dangerous life, [that] called for men with iron nerves and strong muscles.” A slightly more sardonic view from Samuel Johnson put it thusly:

No man will be a sailor who has contrivance enough to get himself into jail; for being in a ship is being in a jail with the chance of being drowned. A man in jail has more room, better food and commonly better company.

The average sailor began his career as a fo'c'sle boy (i.e., a forecabin/cabin boy), usually at a very young age. While most would be between twelve and fourteen years old, it was not uncommon for a youth of nine or ten to set sail for the first time. At this age, he might be a runaway orphan, or from an impoverished family where the alternative was starvation. To most of this lot, the modest wage of ten shillings per month seemed like a fortune, and might well have been a greater sum than any had seen in their brief lifetime.

After spending a decade at sea, a ship would be the only home they would know, and a ship's crew would be the only family they would have. Having little knowledge of anything but the sea, there would be no other trade for which the young man would qualify.

There was a future beyond fo'c'sle boy, and with a little wit and hard work, a promotion to ordinary seaman might be granted within a few years. The salary for an ordinary seaman was typically £2 per month, a rather good wage for someone with little chance to spend a ha'penny while at sea. The ordinary seaman was expected to be familiar with most of the fundamentals of sailing, to follow orders precisely, and to assist in any emergency.

The ordinary seaman was relieved of the most loathsome chores of the fo'c'sle boy, such as cleaning the head. Routine tasks included scrubbing the deck, mending sails, and shoveling ballast. Should an ordinary seaman prove incapable of performing at the expected level, he would quickly be demoted to “boy”, with a corresponding cut in pay. Needless to say, there was significant motivation to perform.

The next step was able seaman, a position that required full knowledge of the most intricate aspects of sail rigging, steering, and basic navigation. A salary of £3 per month was not uncommon, and for that salary one worked twelve hours per day, seven days per week. Each work shift was four hours, followed by a four-hour break. It was impossible to get more than three and a half hours of solid sleep, and in the event of an emergency, the able seaman was expected to work through his break.

For most sailors who started as a fo'c'sle boy, the position of able seaman was the highest rank they could expect to achieve. According to William F. Baker:

For most of those who took to the sea, able seaman was the end of the line – a life style they were to follow for the rest of their days, till disease, fever, or the sea itself released them from their self-imposed bondage.

Two loftier career paths for a life at sea were open to those who had the means. In exchange for a fee of £50, one could sign on as an apprentice seaman, a position comparable to that of ordinary seaman, but that paid no salary. In exchange for the free labor and the up-front fee, the apprentice seaman was supposed to be taught all aspects of sailing, including navigation. Those who proved themselves to be worthy of the time and effort of the senior crew and officers on board would quickly learn the ropes. Those who did not would spend much of the voyage scrubbing the deck. Either way, shipowners came out ahead, for if an apprentice did not prove worthy of promotion, at least they provided free labor for the duration of a voyage.

An even faster path to the captain's table was open to those who could afford a formal education, along with the invaluable real world experience that came from an apprenticeship. This was the path that George Moodie, captain of the Cutty Sark, took.

In order to be considered for a position of ship's captain, candidates had to earn a Master's Certificate. This was no easy matter as, according to Baker, it required them to “rigidly condition themselves to go without sleep for days on end, while still maintaining at all times perfect judgement of wind, weather, gear, and seas.” Furthermore, “they would need to develop great leadership ability, steel nerves, a tremendous business sense, and above all, that certain, unique, and indefinable ability to command.”

Life at sea was a bit more pleasant for the officers and especially for the ship's captain. Not only was the pay considerably more (upwards from 100 times the pay of an ordinary sailor) but there was the added benefit of trading on one's own account. For the captain, especially, the financial benefit of private trading could easily exceed that of his impressive salary. Should he live to enjoy his retirement, a captain could look forward to some very comfortable years.

Moodie served as mate on the Tweed under Captain William Stuart in 1863. He proved to be a capable leader, using good judgement and an effective balance of firmness and fairness when in command. He was the sort of leader that could inspire a crew to exceptional performance in difficult situations. By 1867 he had earned his Master's Certificate and was ready to command a ship of his own.

Having gained the respect of both Captain Stuart and shipowner John Willis, Moodie was assigned as captain of the Laurel, and later, the Lauderdale. When John Willis selected Moodie to supervise the construction of the Cutty Sark, eventually to become its first captain, he did so because he believed Moodie was the most trustworthy and capable of his captains.

The Cutty Sark was one of the most famous of the great Tea Clippers of the nineteenth century. Whether or not she was the greatest has been debated for over a century, but when it comes to legendary lore of the sea, Cutty Sark holds a unique place in maritime history. The most dramatic Cutty Sark story centers on the events of August, 1872.

What happened that month, when Cutty Sark lost her rudder during her long-anticipated race with Thermopole, is well documented. But there are aspects of the event that are still shrouded in mystery. We know that John Willis's brother, Robert, strongly protested any attempt to continue the voyage. Captain Moodie ardently insisted that the race would go on. We know that the dialogue between the two men was heated, but little is known about the ongoing dynamics between Willis and Moodie for the remainder of the voyage.

The first attempt to steer the crippled Cutty Sark was to trail a spare 70-ft. spar over the stern. As one would imagine, this proved ineffective. Moodie then decided to construct a jury rudder, using hewn sections of the spare 70-ft. spar for the rudder, and fabricating braces and mounting hardware from spare metal and an awning stanchion. Fortunately, an English carpenter and a Scottish blacksmith were on board; they were stowaways according to Basil Lubbock.

The sea was still rough as a make-shift forge was fired. Manning the bellows was Moodie's son, Alexander, who was an apprentice seaman. It took four days to craft the jury rudder, from August 15 until August 19. Adding to the daunting task was the often-severe weather. According to Lubbock (The Log of the Cutty Sark):

At one point the whole fire upset into the shirt of young Moodie, and he carried the scars for the rest of his life. At the same time the water took the feet from under the blacksmith, who was hanging on to a red hot bar. As the sea washed him away, the unfortunate man went sailing past the end of the house, still grimly clutching the bar, but holding it as far from his own nose as possible. Its hissing end just missed the sailmaker's face as he sat on his door-sill.

But such difficulties were treated in regular sailor fashion. The sailmaker remarked grimly that at any rate the blacksmith had a good match to light his pipe. The blacksmith swore at young Moodie for not saving the fire; and the apprentice retorted that he was in just as much a hurry to get the red hot cinders off his chest as the blacksmith was to keep the red hot bar off his nose.

And so the work went on.

As Captain Moodie later recounted, the crafting of the jury rudder proved to be the easy part of the project; attaching it to the ship proved to be a greater challenge. The massive jury rudder was lowered in place and stabilized with a six hundred pound anchor attached to the end. This provided enough ballast to keep the rudder from tossing about in the choppy seas. But somehow the massive weight of the anchor and the stress from turbulence caused the rope to fail, and the anchor sank to the bottom of the ocean.

The freed rudder could no longer be managed without the ballast, and it floated to the surface. Ropes, chains, and rudder were all tossed about, endangering every sailor within a swipe of the debris. According to Lubbock, "at this juncture, we may well conclude that the skipper's language kept all hands from catching cold.... Nevertheless, at last the rudder was fixed to the old man's satisfaction." This was achieved on August 20 at 2:00 p.m.

Heavy weather continued on through the month of August, putting constant stress on the rudder's mounting hardware. It lasted almost exactly one month, finally giving out on September 20. But, with the experience gained from the first exercise, Captain Moodie and his crew ("all hands worked with a will") managed to refasten the jury rudder with new hardware within a single day. The ill-fated voyage continued until ship, captain, and complete crew finally reached Gravesend on October 16, 122 days from its Shanghai departure.

Moodie's prowess circulated throughout the maritime community, as every crewman on that fateful voyage proudly repeated the story of his "great piece of work". A weaker man like Robert Willis would have given up and sailed for the closest port. But Moodie exemplified the ideal of the Stewardship of a Sea Captain. He hardly slept at all during the last two months of the voyage. He later said that, had it lasted another week, the ordeal would probably have killed him.

To the consternation of "Old White Hat", George Moodie resigned his command of the Cutty Sark and signed on with a steamship company shortly thereafter. Such a hasty move, with no prior notice, was very disturbing to Willis. When he pressured Moodie for his reasons for quitting, he explained the cause and extent of his "row with Robert Willis." Details of this discussion seem to have been kept between the two, so it is difficult to determine if his discord with Robert Willis was the sole catalyst for Moodie's resignation. Some speculate that Moodie recognized that the Era of The Tea Clipper had ended, and that he wanted to exit at the peak of his game rather than be part of its decline.

To be sure, John Willis did not take lightly the revelation of his brother's role in the resignation of Moodie. According to Lubbock:

... old Jock waxed mightily indignant and declared that as long as he lived his brother should never have another voyage on any of his ships.

And he tried his best to get Moodie to alter his decision, even offering to build him the finest ... ship which could be produced. But Moodie was firm, and left the sea for steam, taking a command in the State Line of Glasgow, which finished by swallowing up a good part of his savings.

Moodie retired in 1891 at the age of 62. For the next 32 years he enjoyed an active and comfortable retirement, with meteorology among his favorite pastimes.

Cutty Sark was only three years old when Moodie left her for steam. In the next few years she would have a few lackluster captains, before being paired with a captain that finally unleashed her true spirit.

Our series on Reversals of Fortune in the Tea Industry will continue this topic in the next issue of the Upton Tea Quarterly.

INFUSERS AND STRAINERS

Tea strainers (sieves) and infusers are unnecessary if you use an infuser teapot (e.g., a Chatsford teapot, page 5). For other teapots, we recommend allowing the tea to steep unrestricted (without infuser) and pouring the tea through a fine-mesh strainer (e.g., AS24 below) after steeping. Alternately, infusers can be used to contain the leaves and allow removal of the used tea leaves. For brewing in a mug at home or at work, we recommend the Chatsford Mug Infuser, below, and the wide range of Finum® products at the right and on page 6.

CHATSFORD MUG INFUSER

The perfect solution for steeping a single cup or mug of tea. The infuser basket is suitable for all types of tea, from very fine-leaf English teas to large-leaf Oolongs. It is very strong in construction, dishwasher-safe, and with proper care will last many years. The brown infuser basket is the same as item AS11B (page 5), which sells for $5.60. This boxed version includes a handy lid, which retains heat during steeping and doubles as a trivet. Made in the U.K.

Item AS31 (Chatsford Mug Infuser with lid): $6.40
(Mass. price $6.80, incl. 6¼% sales tax)

COTTON TEA SOCK

A universal infuser for virtually any teapot. The coated wire hoop (available in 3¼" and 4¼" diameter sizes) rests on the top of your teapot. Even the smallest tea particles are retained in the sock.

Item: AI52 (Size 2 cotton tea sock): $2.40
(Mass. price $2.55, incl. 6¼% sales tax)

Item AI53 (Size 3 cotton tea sock): $2.72
(Mass. price $2.89, incl. 6¼% sales tax)

PERMA-BREW® INFUSERS

The mesh is made of laboratory grade polyester filter screen, retaining all tea particles over 225 microns (.0088 inches). The frame is made of high density polypropylene. They are dishwasher-safe. Made in China.

Item AI23 (Perma-Brew pot infuser): $3.20
(Mass. price $3.40, incl. 6¼% sales tax)

Item AI20 (Perma-Brew cup infuser): $3.04
(Mass. price $3.23, incl. 6¼% sales tax)

FINE-MESH STRAINER

When steeped in a teapot without a strainer basket or infuser, tea must usually be poured through a sieve when the steeping is finished. A proper tea strainer will rest on the mug or cup and will have a fine mesh to capture the fine tea particles found in most loose teas.

Item AS24 (Made in China): $5.60
(Mass. price $5.95, incl. 6¼% sales tax)

FINUM® TEA FILTER BAGS FOR CONVENIENT STEEPING

For pure simplicity, we find the Chatsford line of products to be unbeatable. However, many of our customers have found these oxygen-bleached paper filter bags to be convenient alternatives. Our taste tests have found that Finum oxygen-bleached bags are among the few that are taste-neutral.

FILTER BAGS and PLASTIC HOLDER

The filter holder concept illustrated in figures 1-2, below, works best in a mug but, as illustrated in figures 3-4, it can be used in most teapots. The papers (figure 1) slip snugly over the base of the holder (figure 2). Holder and filter bags are sold separately.

Gift Suggestions

Choosing a gift for someone new to loose tea can be a difficult task when there are over 400 selections in a catalog. Our sampler sets (p. 47) are quite popular as introductions to tea, and pair nicely with a Chatsford teapot (page 5). Purchasing tea for an experienced tea drinker can be equally challenging. As someone who has been drinking tea for some time has likely settled into a personal niche, it can be difficult to select something that is just right. While a gift certificate (p. 53) is appropriate for any level of tea enjoyment, it frequently makes an even better gift for a long-time tea drinker.
